Special Correspondence to The Times.

New York, Sept. 7.—Children are coming and going every day. The ring of their laugner and their childsh shouts of merriment roll down the slope to meet you. The din ceases only when they are kneeling in the chapel and when the lights are out after taps. Then, often, the wait of some homesics walf is in the air until mainight. But all this is mostly very heautiful to see homesics wait is in the air until mininght. But all this is mostly very beautiful to see and hear, these busy days, at the Christian Herald Children's Home in Nyack, N. Y., an institution the like of which is not to be seen essewhere.

Few of them are under six or over ten years old, and each child under goes examination by a medical officer of the institution before being admitted.

You hear the home before you reach it. Two hundred children sporting under the trees without restraint make plenty of soise. But here at last is the inscription over the gateway at the entrance of the grounds of the institution. A sweet-faced young woman receives in the absence of the mattern, Miss Helen Collins, who, she explains, is absent buying supplies, and graciously places her time and information at your disposal.

Shitting on a piazza overloading the river from Sing Sing to Tappan Zee you learn, under the pleasantest conditions, that the home owns seventy acres of land, meadow, orchards and wild woods. given each child.

The last meal of the day is followed by divine worship in the chapel, in which some of the children manifest remarkable interest. Only a cynic would be disposed to sneer at the fact that groups of children have been seen in quiet nooks holding a little prayer meeting of their own. The Christian Endeavor movement is largely responsible for this expression of early piety, in the contemplation of which it is nothing surprising that praying and singing boys deserting Mrs. Glennan that was. She appeared before Alderman McMasters of that city on Saturday and stated that she and Silling had been married at Wheeling. W. Va., by magistrate Frazier on December 17, 1894, and Drought witnesses, who testified that he had called ner his wife and they understood this to be the relation between the couple. Mr. Silling is now a salesman for the Brown Shoe Company of St. Louis.

Mrs. Silling is a daughter of the late Judge Kenneth Raynor of North Carolina, who was solictor of the Treasury be for the war. Dr. Glennan is in the Marine Corps.

About eight years ago, while living at seattle, Wash., they made a scene in a hotel, and Mrs. Glennan went to Texes to live with her mother. After a time Dr. Glennan brought suit for divorce, naming Dr. Magroder of the Marine Corps as correspondent. Mrs. Glennan employed Mr. Heber May to defend her. The suit was beaten and Mrs. Glennan employed Mr. Heber May to defend her. The suit was beaten and Mrs. Glennan employed Mr. Ballimore shoe house. They went to gether to a Virginia summer hotel and later were at Harper's Ferry.

Early in September, Dr. Glennan, who was stationed then in Delaware, got word of what was happening. He employed a detective, who followed the couple and one morning surprised the two in a Twelith street boarding-house. It was midnight when Dr. Glennan, withthe detectives housed in the doors of the rooms occupied by Mrs. Glennan and her children and Mr. Silling, Dr. Glennan seized the boys and carried them away with him. old doctor what he considered the secret of Dr. Flower's success.

"Well, sir," he said, slowly, "in the lirst place, Dr. B. C. Flower knows his business; in the second place, he is the only physician I know anything alcout who can accurately and in detail diagnose any patient's condition without assting a question or being told anything, better than the patient could tell imm, and this makes him master of his profession."

I am not geoing to fill your paper with testimonials, though I can furnish you with a thousand if you wish, he maining many of the most prominent men and women of this and other countries, curred of supposed incurable diseases, after having been given up by other physicians to die.

If your readers desire to know something of the work of this wonderful man; if the sick would know how to get well when help has falled them on every hand; the ugly how to become beautiful; those prematurely old and broken down, how to regain their vitality, youth, vigor, and hope, let them send four cents in stamps for Dr. R. C. Flower's new work, Youth and Health Forever.

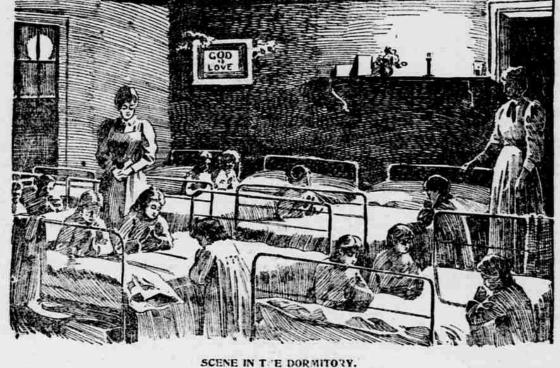

I could only occasionally get a word with Dr. Flower for he is the busiest man in the world, but these points I gathered from him. That he could always be consulted at his Boston offices the first two weeks in each month he is liable to be away from home. His office practice goes on just the same during his absence as when he is there. That he could always the open up a bonnata to agents. A had who has been acting an agent for the sale of some of Dr. R. C. Flower's specialties during the last ten weeks said she could easily make $100 per week. That everybody knew of Dr. Flower and everybody wanted his preparations. That she at first ordered $10 worth, but now ordered large quantities at a time." I want only active, energetic agents, said the doctor. "but to such I will give the opportunity to make ten times as much as in anything cise."

Possibly the most wonderful feature in Dr. Flower's practice will be his new inventions. That she at first

The broad pointed revers, the high pointed cuffs, and the tall belt are of cream serge. A full high frill of cream mosuseline de sole finishes the top of the standing coltar.

A delightful little hat that goes with this costume is a sailor of rough red straw with a band at the back that tips it way over the face. It is trimmed enlirely in choux, or bright red tuile, and quantities of red currants with a few of their green leaves and stems.

Such pretty shades in red there are for fall. One of the lovellest is currant red, deep, and with a strength that makes it a favorite wherever one sees it.

The Reverend Mr. Bacchus, pastor of Fifth and Virginia Avenue Boutheast Methodist Profestant Church, will deliver a discusses, subject, "Observance of Labor Day," Sunday, September 13, 1896, to which you are especially invited.

You note that there are thirteen seats at table for these young people—the principal berself is scarcely past her youth. Indeed, the atmosphere of the establishment is youthful, so to speak, and small wonder that the visitor's eyes rest on the central figure of groups seen here and there, where beauty dispenses her smiles and kind words the and fond caresses. That surely was a happy thought which provided a street organ for the delectation of the city urchies, who joyfully grind out its liberal equipment of tunes heard on the Bowery.

Trees bear noisy burdens of adventurous hays. Some Vanches does not provide the street of the Trees bear noisy burdens of adventurous boys. Some knuckle down at marbles beinght by the barrel for their enjoyment, and, on benches built for the purpose, girls renew, under these improved conditions, their acquaintance with the absorbing game of facks. Those youngsters are hurbing quoits, and these are "ringing the sticks," throwing with laughable inaccuracy from hands unacquainted with rural sports, the circles provided for their play. This graceful little litalian girl brings a burden of wild flowers for the young woman with whom I converse, and the audicious "Frenchy," loaded with apples, pays tribute at the same shrine frem his store of blushing fruit collected in his wanderings. He displays the grace of the embryo Frenchman, though born on the east side of the American metropolis. ing the Hudson, is the children's diningroom. Near by floats the Stars and Stripes, waving proudly in the sunshine.

Miss Colline is home in time to ring the "order" beil about noon, when the children wash and spruce up a bit preparatory to dinner. The domestics and caretakers are kept busy as bees serving this substantial neal of meat and vegetables, with pudding as dessert. Two processions, one of boys and one of girls, are formed, going to and returning from the dining tent. The drum is very much in evidence on these occasions. I notice that the dignity of the drum-major is not an undivided possession.

A handsome Italian boy does effective work this time, and there are others who in turn are found competent to dispute a skilled mastery of noise with the irrepressible "Frenchy."

Till supper time traretakers and children
follow their will in pawn, wood, and orchard.
Tis touching to see as tot who has known so little of sympathy and love, timidly place her hand in that of the young lady she calls teacher, and fook up into her face, there assuredly finding a responsive smile and loving word. In a day or two the new arrivals will have learned, like their predecessors, that all are friends, and will

Additional to whith has been said of the Additional to what has been said of the cieting of these young visitors, it is interesting to know that in spite of the temptation of good mill, preference has been shown for hot coffee as the breakfast beverage. Milk, either bot or cold, having been rejected in favor of the fragrant berry, a weak decection is served plentifully enriched with milk and sugar. The stimulation of coffee being called for, it is given with the wholesome modification indicated. A variety of cereal foods is served mornings. The children don't care for a hot drink in the evening, when each one is Bordering the bolero is an applique of lace, and deep lace frills finish the elbow sleeves.

This is worn over a skirt of cream taffeta with sage green ruffles of merveilleuse edged with lace. The bolero can be slipped off and another color be worn over the foulard.
